THE VILAS POSTAL TREATY

CAUSES CONSIDERABLE DISCUSSION IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. Allen, of Massachusetts, Recites i Little Bistory and He Is Ably Supported-Mr. Blount's Temper-A Big Day's Work in the Senate.

In the Senate yesterday, on motion of Mr. Edmunds, it was ordered that as to-day would be Good Friday the Senate adjourn over until to-morrow.

Among the petitions and memorials pre-sented and referred were the following: Against the wanton destruction of the rehitectural proportions of the capitol, alleging incompetency on the part of the having been heretofore referred to the committee on interstate commerce, were reported back from that committee and ton motion of Mr. Cullom) referred to the committee on education and labor.

Mr. Berry addressed the Senate on the subject of the President's annual message. He spoke of the universal interest awakened by the bold and fearless manner in which the system of federal taxation was discussed in that message, and said that the time could not much longer be delayed when some change must be made in that system. When fairly canvassed and understood, its injustice would (he believed) necessitate a change.

Taxation should be for revenue purposes only. The present system was unterly indefensible, it was fundamentally wrong in principle, and doubly wrong in its details.

At the conclusion of his remarks the Senate proceeded to the consideration of bills on the callendar, only those being taken up to which there was no objection. Among the bills passed were the following.

bills on the calendar, only those being taken up to which there was no objection. Among the bills passed were the following:

To incorporate the American Trust Company of the District of Columbia.

The total number of bills passed was skylvone.

THE HOUSE.

Mr. Enlee, of Tennessee, reported adversely a resolution calling upon the Postmaster General for the following information:

First, What instructions, if any, have been given to subordinate officers of the Postoffice Department intended to prohibit American citizens from using the United States malls on the same terms as Canadian citizens living in the same vicinage and competing in business with such American citizens.

Second, Whether any statute law prohibits the mailing in Canada of seeds, plants, and bulbs grown by Americans on American soil.

Third, Whether, by the provisions of the recent postal treaty, the officers of the postal service of the United States are authorized to place an espionage on Canadian mails for the purpose of determining whether citizens of the United States are availing themselves of the United States are availing themselves of the beneficent provisions accorded to Canadian citizens by the postal treaty.

The report accompanying the resolution the beneficent provisions accorded to Canadian citizens by the postal treaty.

The report accompanying the resolution states that the resolution partakes more of a criticism of existing law, a protest against its enforcement, and an arraignment of the Postmaster General for enforcing the law than of a proper resolution of inquiry.

Mr. Enloe said that the resolution reflected upon the Postmaster General by drawing an inference that he has violated the law by the issuing of a certain order, and that it was intended to reflect also upon the department for the negotiation of the convention. He contended that the Postmaster General had ample authority conferred upon him by the fourth article of the postal treaty to issue the order complained of. It had been asserted that the treaty had been an unfortunate treaty, and it had been condemned as nate treaty, and it had been condemned as nate treaty, and it had been condemned as an attempt to discriminate against American citizens. A similar convention had been negotiated with Mexico, and no complaint had been made in regard to it. According to the terms of the convention with Canada the United States got the postage upon letters mailed in her own territory, while Canada got the postage on letters mailed on her side of the border. As a financial treaty it was a decidedly advantageous treaty to this country. It was a wise treasy.

Mr. Allen, of Massachusetts, thought that the spectucle was a unique one of the majority of the committee of the House bringing in an adverse report upon a resolumajority of the committee of the House bringing in an adverse report upon a resolu-tion asking official information from the head of a great department of the govern-ment. He did not think that the House adverse report upon a reswould indorse an adverse report upon a res-olution calling for information on a subject olution calling for information on a subject which bore upon the interests of thousands of farmers who were anxious to know what Congress was going to do. Such an action on the part of Congress would very properly be construed by the people as being due to one of two reasons—either the majority desired to completely ignore the wishes of the minority, or desired to shield some incompetent official. The Postmaster General, filled with the desire of signallzing his administration, or feeling that his name would achieve higher notoriety if it could be linked with a great treaty, or filled with a desire to emulate his colleague at the head of the Department of State, had entered into regulations with Canada by which he was willing to make concessions to people who lived in that country. The Vilas postal the Department of State, had entered into regulations with Canada by which he was willing to make concessions to people who lived in that country. The Vilas postal treaty was conceived. The nurses and midwives of the department were promptly on hand. They might have lacked something in experience, but what they wanted in skill they made up in enthusiasm. The day of labor came and the supreme moment arrived, and amid general rejoicing the poor little postal treaty of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada opened its poor, weak, watery eyes upon a cheerless world. It was such a little one that it did not attract much notice at the time, it did not attract much notice at the time outside of the immediate family. It was no born with a caul, like Mr. Dickens's famou born with a caul, like Mr. Dickens's famous character; but it had a protocal, on which was emblazoned in proper heraldic tokens the whole geneological tree. The freaty went into effect on the 1st of March, and about this time shrewd business men discovered that nostage on seeds, &c., was 10 cents in America, while in Canada it was but 4 cents. They discovered that men employed in seed business or in large advertisement business by having their work done in Canada could avail themselves of the cheaper postage prevailing there, and done in Canada could avail themselves of the cheaper postage prevailing there, and that the postal revenues would be greatly reduced. The effect upon the revenue was practically to turn over some $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 annually to the Canadian government. He did not know what this could mean. Why this deference to the English government? It could not be that the administration intended to deliver the people bound to that government. He was afraid, if there should be another session of English commissioners in Washington, some of the officers of the government would be found walking down the streets with orange flowers in their batton holes, with the bottom of their trousers turned up, with large caues, and with built terriers. Haughter.

Mr. White, of New York, suggested that if the committee on postoflees and postroads had displayed half the amonnt of ability in securing information on the sub-postal treaty was one of those which did not require ratification, but which was entirely under the control of the executive branch of the government. His resolution was in no way offensive, but only asked for information of which he thought the House should be in possession. If the Postoffice Department had blundered into making a treaty which was beneficial to Canadian seedsmeen, why should not American citizens have an equal show? Was there anything so attractive in azure that the government was compelled to give the blue noses an advantage over Americans, whose noses were not so blue?

Mr. Blount, of Georgia, said that while the resolution purported to ask for information, he undertook to say that there was not a gentleman in the House, who was interested in the matter, who had not that information now. He defended the Postmaster General, and was then proceeding to read a letter from that official bearing upon the subject when he was interrupted by Mr. Reed, of Maine, who was seated near by.

Mr. Blount refused to be interrupted, which called forth the exclamation "maturally" from Mr. Reed. Mr. Blount refused that the gentleman was always interjecting himself into everybody's speech in a rule way, and that he would proceed in order without being deterred by the gentleman.

When Mr. Blount concluded his remarks, Mr. Reed, of Maine, said that the gentleman from Georgia had first told the House that it was in possession of all the information on the subject, and then proceeded to read a private letter from the Postmaster General giving further information. He (Mr. Reed) did not wonder that the call memper of the gentleman was ruffled when he called attention to that fact; but he could not pardon the gentleman his slight attempt of litemper which had allowed him to wander into the region of exaggeration—not to use a broader term—and say that he (Mr. Reed) was in the habit of mingling in all speeches made in the House.

Mr. Peters, of Kunsas, wished to amend the resolution by striking out the

The House then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Springer, of Illinois, in the chair) on the Indian appropriation bill.

In the general debate that followed Mr. Nelson, of Minnesota, delivered himself of a speech in which he advocated low tariff that looked too suspiciously like free trade to arouse any enthusiasm among Republicans. The Democrats howled and laughed as their feelings on Mr. Nelson's utternness moved them, and more than one of them offered lim a seat on their side of the chamber.

Mr. Funston, of Kansas, attempted to put some questions to Mr. Nelson, but the latter remarked that the gentleman could have the floor to himself, and took his seat not replying to Mr. Funston's challenge as to why he did not put wheat on the free list.

The committee then rose, and the House at 5:15 adjourned.

The Citizens' Association of Georgetown numbered among the things of the past, will continue to preserve the even tenor of its way indifferent to the representative committee and thinking only of the new bridge celebration. The regular and final meeting of the association was held last night it Association Hall, Mr. John T. Mitchell chairman, and Mr. A. Greenlees secretary.

chairman, and Mr. A. Greenlees secretary.

Mr. Mitchell stated that he was unable to prevent the resolutions opposing the bill before the Maryland legislature to cede portions of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to a certain railroad company to the last meeting of the Committee of One Hundred, as but one subject—that of the attempt to change the present form of District government—came before them. Since then he had understood that the measure had been defeated in that legislature, and there was now no use of paying any more attention to it.

now no use of paying any more attention to it.

Mr. Mitchell also made a report from the special committee appointed to consider the advisability of withdrawing their representatives from the Committee of One Hundred. The committee decided unanimously to withdraw, and recommended the adoption of the following resolution:

of the following resolution:

Whereas the Citizens' Committee of West Washington was organized for the purpose of promoting the general interests of this section through the regularly instituted and appointed authorities of the District; and Whereas our connection with the Committee of One Hundred seems rather to defeat than aid this object; therefore.

Resolved, That we discontinue our connection with the Committee of One Hundred, and that a copy of this resolution be sont to the secretary of the Committee of One Hundred for the information of that body.

A number of the members made short arguments in favor of the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. Mitchell reviewed the whole history

Mr. Michell reviewed the whole history of that committee, from its inception to the present time. He claimed that when the subject was first broached, and at the preliminary meetings, the objects of the Committee were in entire accord with those of the West Washington committee, viz., to aid and assist the present officers of the District government in any measure tending to benefit any and all of the citizens. For a while the committee followed these objects, and many good and notable measures were accomplished, as, for instance, those relating to education, railroads, &c. But in a short time it became noticeable that there were a number of sorehead politicians among the members. Some of them were sore because they had lost places through incompetency, or perhaps other equally as good reasons. Others wanted office and were willing to join in any undertaking that would tend to that end. Before long these soreheads combined their forces and then proceeded to do away with the principal object that they were organized for—to assist the present form of government, &c.—and the lifteen commissioner form of government was agreed upon by them as the right thing for their benefit. Some of the leaders had wheled (and tried) in the past to be appointed as one of the three commissioners of the District and falled. They therefore decided that if they could get Congress to adopt their scheme then their chances to be commissioner would be first class, and against the protest of a large number of the members who had the good of the District at heart the plan was rushed through. Under such circumstances Mr. Mitchell believed that the mission of the Committee of One Hundred had come to an end, and he believed it to be for the best interests of all good citizens to cut loose from it and he trusted that the resolution would be adopted. At the conclusion of the cation of the representative committee had been adopted, and would be given out soon. He had been invited to attend the meetings, but did not consider it proper for him so t

A LESS ACTIVE MARKET.

Irregular Changes in the Course of Prices Though Many Advances Recorded. New York, Mar. 29.-The stock market was ess active to-day, and the course of prices was quite irregular, leaving prices irregularly hanged at the close of business; though most of the list show advances. The approach of the holiday made the bears som of the list show advances. The approach of the holiday made the bears somewhat more wary than usual during the previous days of this week, and while there was short selling at odd times during the day, the feature of the trading, especially in the feromon, was the covering of short contracts.

There was very little pressure to sell at any time in the day and evidences of support in most of the leading stocks were not wanting. The bears made a raid on the let soon after the opening of business and succeeded in tringing about fractional declines over the entire list, but the resistance was foo great, and the shorts then went into exer, which brought mostly of the list materially above first prices. Toward delivery hour, however, there was free realizations by the early buyers and most of the improvement was lost throughout the list. The market railled in the last few minutes, however, and the close was steady to firm at irregular changes for the day.

Money on call has been easy, ranging from 2 to 6, last loan at 4, and closing offered at 5. Stelling exchange is dull and steady; actual business at 45% to 98 for 60 day bills and 48% to 48% for demand. Posted rates 48% to 48%, Government bonds, except the currency of shave been weak. State bonds have been entirely neglected.

TELEPHONE CALL-340,

THE SCHEME DETECTED.

Bold Plot to Break From the District Jail Exposed.

It is reported that the guards of the juli discovered a plot made by a number of criminals awaiting transportation to Albany to break jail. It was so planned that the guards were to be overpowered and if necesary killed in the attempt to obtain liberty. A prisoner, overhearing some fellow prisoners talking about the scheme, gave it away to the officers, who immediately scarched the parties suspected and they were surprised to find pistos and knives on them, which were evidently brought them by friends.

The leaders proposed to ask for a both, and were evidently brought them by friends.
